Welcome to St. Ives

Fishing, farming and mining are the industries that shaped St. Ives, with fishing the dominant force in the heart of the town. In the mid 19th Century, there were 400 boats involved in pilchard fishing plus sailing ships importing coal, and exporting tin, copper, stone and, of course, fish. On the seaward side of Smeaton's Pier you can see the remains of the "new" pier which was built to alleviate the overcrowding in the harbour. Built mostly of wood, this pier was quickly destroyed by the sea and Smeaton's Pier was extended instead. The West Pier (by the Lifeboat House) was built in 1894 as a loading jetty for locally quarried stone.

When you stand by the Lifeboat House and look along the Wharf Road, bear in mind that this road was built as recently as 1922. Before then only a narrow pathway ran between the sea and buildings, with Fore Street carrying all the traffic - both ways!

St. Ives is famous for its art galleries, studios and craftshops. Since the 19th Century St. Ives has attracted many artists, professional and amateur, with many of international acclaim gaining inspiration here, working in studios still in use today. The Tate Gallery, by Porthmeor Beach, displays work by St. Ives-based artists and the Barbara Hepworth Museum features the work of this famous sculptress in her own garden and studio.

A stones throw from the harbour area is a host of narrow streets and passageways comprising the old part of the town, all interconnecting and offering innumerable opportunities to explore.

Whatever your reason for coming to St. Ives - the surfing, the beaches, the coastal walks or the art - you can find it here.

Produced by St. Ives Round Table with all profits going to local charities & youth organisations, our thanks to all advertisers, please support them with your business.
